

Sonnenuntergang.

Nr. 66.

Sunset.

„Wo bist du?

“Where art thou?

Trunken dämmert die Seele mir.“

Faint and dim grows my soul within.”

(Gedicht von Friedrich Hölderlin.)

(Translated by Mrs. B. Shapleigh.)

Peter Cornelius,

Wien 28. April 1862. Nachgelassenes Werk.

Bisher unveröffentlicht.

(Bewegt.)
Animato.

Gesang.
Voice.

Pianoforte.

Wo bist du?
Where art thou?

Wo
Where

bist art du?
art thou?

Trun - - ken dämmert die
Faint and dim grows my

See - le mir                      Nach                      all                      dei - nen soul    with - in                      At                      thought                      of                      thy

Won - - - - - nen,                      all                      dei - - - - - nen glo - - - - - ries,                      thought                      of                      thy

Won - - - - - nen,                      Denn e - ben ist's, daß ich ge - glo - - - - - ries.                      A mo - ment since, I list'ning lauscht,                      wie,                      gol -                      de - ner                      Tö - ne voll,                      Der ent - heard,                      how,                      full                      of                      gol - den Notes,                      the - zücken.de Son - nen - jü - ling Sein A - - bend - lied auf youthful and char - ming Sun - god His ev - - ning song in - himm - lischer Lei - himm - er spielt;

 toned on his heav'n - ly lyre;

Es
 It

tön - ten rings die Wäl - der und Hü - - gel nach, soun - ded o'er the val - leys and o'er the hills,

ff

Es tön - ten rings die Wäl - der und
 It soun - ded o'er the val - leys and Hügel nach, Doch fern ist er o'er the hills, Now far has he zu from - men Völ - kern, Die ihn noch eh - ren, hin - to pi - ous na - tions, That do him ho - nor, his weg - - - ge - gan - - - gen.

 way - - - be - ta - - - ken.